Short-Term Rehabilitative Care for Seniors

The Ida Kayne Transitional Care Unit (TCU) at the Los Angeles Jewish Home is designed to help seniors successfully transition back home after an illness, injury, medical procedure, or hospital stay.

Expert medical and rehabilitative staff and state-of-the-art facilities make the Ida Kayne TCU the ideal partner on the path to recovery and wellness.

Short-term participants at the Ida Kayne TCU receive treatment from geriatric specialists in physical, occupational, and speech therapy, and enjoy full access to all of the clinical and personal support services of the Jewish Home.

Short-term rehab is available at the Mark Taper Building on the Jewish Home’s Grancell Village Campus in the San Fernando Valley.

The Jewish Home takes a team approach to recovery and wellness by combining onsite medical care, prescribed therapies, personal coaching and counseling, high quality Kosher meals and access to the Home’s many activities. Every bed has a window view to the outdoors.

With our widely-acclaimed model of caring for the needs of the whole person, the Jewish Home also provides a sensitive environment full of social, cultural, and spiritual opportunities.

The average length of stay at the Jewish Home’s Ida Kayne Transitional Care Unit is from several days to five weeks, though longer stays of up to 90 days are possible.

Why Short-Term Rehab?

An innovative solution to one of the special challenges facing the senior community, short-term care at the Jewish Home evolved as a response to the shortened hospital stays that are now standard practice for most insurance providers. Research shows high quality short-term rehabilitative care substantially improves quality of life and long-term outcomes for seniors.
